LOST

For fifty strides in each direction, the blast crater carved a perfect circle in the piled bodies baking under the Kenebres sun. Such was the force of the blast that the center of the crater rested a full ten feet below its outer lip, deep furrows carved in the unforgiving stone of the Mendevian plain.

Elven cultists lay interspersed amongst dead crusaders, their lack of numbers a testament to the number of fiends in this part of the battlefield. Armed in the manner of far Tian-Xia, the reason for their presence would remain a mystery unknown to the descendants of both their dead foes and one lone survivor.

Lying senseless in the center of the crater lay a young elven woman, barely into her adulthood. Light ash swirled around her bare limbs, pale in the late noon sun, scoured clean by the force of the explosion.

Rising groggily to her feet, she limped for the edge of the crater. Seeking clothing amongst the dead, she randomly slipped amongst their ranks, a pale crow dipping for treasures before resurfacing. In the end, she quit the field in a torn and bloody kimono under leather lamellar armor. A dead squire's boots protected her feet and a fallen samurai's katana was gripped firmly in both hands.

Scanning the horizon, the great black cloud ruled out the north as a destination. A walled city rose to the east but something in her heart cautioned against that path. With but one exception, he appearance clearly matched that of the invader.

With a shrug, the young woman set off south, unaware that she was finishing a tale begun a hundred years ago, on the other side of the world.

ROSHOMON

Three groups of elves fled Earthfall, one across the bridge between worlds to Sovaryian, another across avistan and the last into Sakamina. Within the Caverns of the Craven, the seeress Jininsiel saved ten score and fifty from the gaze of Rovagug and the Defiler's minions have sought dominion over their escaped prey since.

Such is the skill of the mages of the Mithril Shogun that despite their presence near the very heart of Tiang Xia, it would be another 8500 before the Minkai finally make contact. Relations between the two nations remain strong to this day with deep admiration on both sides. Still, disaster struck that day in 6119, for the human brought with them the elves' ancient enemies, the children of Rovagug - demons.

Amongst the Minkai explorers who discovered Jinin was a servant by the name of Roshomon. Unassuming and frequently overlooked, Roshomon belonged to no great Family nor trade union. Such was the perfect vessel for a nascent demon, hidden deep in the man's psyche, below the level of conscious thought where he might be detected by mystic or seer.

In such a manner, one of the most successful oni in all Tian Xia got his start while virtually asleep in a human servant.

Over the next one hundred years, the increasingly powerful demon drove wedges first between the samurai of Minkai and their servants and then between the elves and their guests. By the time the Minkai delegation returned home late the following year, Roshomon now resided inside Yukio, the wife of the Mithril Count, leader of the Jininin.

Yukio would bring many hard times to Jinin in the following one hundred years. Because of her influence, The Black Aerie became established in the mountains of Ze Ha. Years later, the samsaran junk The Rebirth of Hope would flounder and sink to Nagaji bushi. Later that same year, her crew would rise again, not as reincarnated samsarans, but as waterlogged corpses, stealing children from southern Jinin.

Roshomon's crowning achievement was the founding of Kaoling in 1710. Her last act under the demon's influence was to delay an elven response to the fall of the Shensheng sister states. By the time the elves marched, the Council of Nine ruled, not even Lady Nanbyo could stop it, and Roshomon had fled Lady Yukio, taking up residence in her newborn daughter - Etsuko.

Etsuko disappeared on the night of her birth but left behind the corpses of her mother and the entire birthing party in the Silver Tree. Every nation of Tian Xia scoured their borders for ten years searching for the young elven girl, from Minka to the Wall of Heaven.

In the end, Etsuko Kaijitsu would not be on Golarion again until 4714 in a crater beneath the walls of the Crusader citadel of Kenebres.
